

Yes, We Have Toboggans!

There was just enough snow left on the toboggan slide in the county South Park yesterday to permit good tobogganing and Ellen O'Leary, front in the picture, and Maxine Krimm were there to take advantage of it. Both of them have been promised a plane ride during the Pittsburgh aircraft show here, March 9 and 16, but yesterday, when they heard of the sport offered on the toboggan slides in the park, said they decided to get in some preliminary gliding while there was gliding to be done.

There are 12 toboggans in both the North and South parks now and with every snowfall crowds of youngsters and adults flock to the recreation centers where toboggans and bob sleds are provided by the county for those wishing to use them.

A ride of nearly 3,000 feet, down one hill and up another, is possible on the South Park track. The picture shows the girls at the top of the hill before the take-off.

The usual quota of deaths from exposure, accidents and freezing were reported. Ohio counted a toll of six as the result of the heavy snowstorm of the last two days. Two unidentified homeless men died of exposure in Chicago; two others were found in a barn in Minneapolis, one frozen to death, the other dying.
